

As Biden Urges Global Warming Action, Courts Shape Climate Policy at Home

Media Mentions

August 19, 2021 | The Washington Post | 1 minute read | Washington, DC

Bracewell's Scott Segal spoke with The Washington Post on how the Biden administration must balance complying with the law, while maintaining the support of several lawmakers from coal states and the trade unions in the ongoing environmental debate over drilling and mining on federal lands and waters.

"Politically, the administration is looking to keep moderate Democrats from coal states" on its side, said Segal. "Further, organized labor has expressed a preference for supporting clean energy rather than simply putting fossil fuels off limits. So you can see why the administration would tread carefully."

About 42 percent of US coal production comes from federal lands, mostly from the Powder River Basin in Montana and Wyoming.

Click here to read more from *The Washington Post* \(subscription required\).

Related People

Scott H. Segal
Partner
WASHINGTON, DC
+1.202.828.5845
scott.segal@bracewell.com

Related Industries

Energy

Related Practices

Environmental, Social & Governance \(ESG\)

Environment, Lands and Resources

Government Relations