Frank Maisano, a senior principal in Bracewell's Policy Resolution Group, told Inside Climate News that industry leaders he speaks with do not see the tax credits enacted by the Inflation Reduction Act going away anytime soon.

"They think this is not going away because of the good things it can do," Maisano said. He added that the bill included policies that have generally drawn bipartisan support, and that while it may get tweaked, "I don't think Congress is going to go back on these things that are happening in their districts."
