

Opposing Forces of Biden, Red Senate Could Bring Stability to Gas Industry

Media Mentions

November 18, 2020 | S&P Global | 1 minute read | Washington, DC

Bracewell's Policy Resolution Group Senior Principal Frank Maisano said to S&P Global that a Biden administration working with a divided Congress could offer a "moderating force" as the federal government works to rebuild the economy and handle the pandemic.

Maisano deduces that given the amount of renewable energy in many Republican lawmakers' districts, the two political parties could come together to pass a greener infrastructure bill to help the nation. While such a package might not be as green as progressives want, Maisano added that "it will be a bridge to start building some consensus."

Click here to read more from S&P Global.

Related People

Frank V. Maisano
Senior Principal
WASHINGTON, DC
+1.202.828.5864
frank.maisano@bracewell.com

Related Industries

Energy

Related Practices

Government Relations

Oil & Gas

Renewable Energy

Strategic Communications