Jeff Holmstead talked with Chemical Engineering & News about the impact of the demise of the Chevron doctrine on the Biden administration’s “whole of government” approach to climate change policy.

“This will make it harder for the Biden administration to pursue its ‘whole of government approach’ to addressing climate change. There are political appointees in virtually every federal agency — including agencies that have nothing to do with the environment — who are trying to find ambiguities in statutory language that would allow them to pursue their preferred policies,” said Holmstead.
