

Trump Win Is ‘Setback’ for Climate Protection, but Clean Energy Advocates Say Progress Will Continue

Media Mentions

November 06, 2024 | Utility Dive | 1 minute read | Washington, DC

Bracewell's Liam Donovan told Utility Dive that energy issues were “embedded in the dynamics” of the election and may have wound up helping Republicans.

“Energy was messaged by Republicans as ‘your gas is costing you more’ ... and I think there’s a recognition by the Democratic side about the danger of putting climate front and center,” Donovan said. He noted Vice President Kamala Harris declaring she would not ban fracking as an example of energy issues putting Democrats on the “defensive.”

Related People

Liam P. Donovan
Senior Political Strategist
WASHINGTON, DC
+1.202.828.5847
liam.donovan@bracewell.com

Related Industries

Energy

Related Practices

Government Relations
Strategic Communications